LAKE PERRIS Loses Olympic Venues AS LA28 CONSOLIDATES TO BE LA CENTRIC

PERRIS — In its efforts to consolidate event venues into a tighter geographic profile, LA28, the organizing committee for the 2028 LA Olympics has pulled water events from Lake Perris.

Rowing and canoe sprinting was previously set to be held at Lake Perris, but officials relocated the event to Long Beach, which involved arrangements supported by the World Rowing Congress.

In a statement, the City of Perris said, “It’s a lost opportunity for the city and the region, as we believe Lake Perris would have been a great venue for the LA Olympics in 2028. Moving forward, we will continue to present our city as a strong and viable candidate for future opportunities of this nature.”

Former Utah Resident, Gnatalie, the Only Green-Boned Dinosaur Found on the Planet Will be on Display in LA

By JAIMIE DING Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The latest dinosaur being mounted at the Natural History Museum in Los Angeles is not only a member of a new species — it’s also the only one found on the planet whose bones are green, according to museum officials.

Named “Gnatalie” (pronounced Natalie) for the gnats that swarmed during the excavation, the long-necked, long-tailed herbivorous dinosaur’s fossils got its unique coloration, a dark mottled olive green, from the mineral celadonite during the fossilization process.

Perris, Calif. – On July 12, 2024, 3 people were arrested for DUI, and 45 citations were issued, for violations such as driving with suspended/revoked license or without a license at a DUI checkpoint.

The DUI checkpoint was held at Perris Blvd. and San Jacinto Ave. from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m.

45 drivers were cited for operating a vehicle unlicensed or with a suspended/revoked license, and 911 vehicles were contacted. 77 vehicles were subject to secondary screening, 7 field sobriety tests were conducted, and 7 vehicles were towed.

DUI checkpoint locations are determined based on reported incidents of impaired driving-related crashes. The primary purpose of DUI checkpoints are to promote public safety by taking suspected impaired drivers off roads.

Funding for this checkpoint was provided by a grant from the California Office of Traffic Safety, through the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

SOLUTION TO THIS WEEKS PUZZLE

Nuevo Man Accused of Embezzling Local Senior Woman's Funds

RIVERSIDE (CNS) - A Nuevo man accused of stealing hundreds of thousands of dollars from two people whom he persuaded to give him money to invest in a bogus profit-making venture will ask a judge on Thursday to lower his bail.

Toby David Smith, 59, was arrested on July 3 following a Riverside County Sheriff's Department investigation into a nearly two-year fraud scheme allegedly perpetrated by the defendant.

Smith is charged with four counts of financial elder abuse, two counts each of money laundering and grand theft and a sentence-enhancing allegation of targeting multiple individuals in an embezzlement scheme.

During a status hearing at the Riverside Hall of Justice Monday, Smith's attorney submitted a motion for bail review, and Superior Court Judge Gary Polk scheduled a hearing on the motion for Thursday.

The defendant is being held in lieu of $930,000 bail -- the total sum he's accused of embezzling -- at the Byrd Detention Center in Murrieta.

His attorney intends to argue that his client's lack of prior criminal history warrants a bail reduction.

According to a bail-setting affidavit filed earlier this month by sheriff's Investigator Lance Colmer, Smith came under investigation in April following complaints by the adult daughter of a 71-year-old Nuevo woman, identified only as "C.C.," who had written a series of checks to the defendant beginning in May 2022.

Colmer alleged that Smith convinced C.C., with whom he attended church, that he could generate windfall profits from an investment vehicle operated by his company, Reserve Strategies, which was determined to be entirely fake.

The defendant made the same claims to another fellow churchgoer, identified only as "F.M.," and like C.C., the man agreed to commit funds to Reserve Strategies.

According to the affidavit, C.C. wrote a total of five checks amounting to $742,936, while the other victim committed close to $200,000.

"Toby Smith systematically transferred, depleted, spent and laundered nearly all of the money via personal spending at restaurants, travel, bills and retail purchases," the document stated. "He was laundering the money by transferring funds to 10-plus banks and financial platforms. He transferred at least $60,000 of ... (the victims') money to two crypto-currency companies, Coinbase and Binance."

At the outset of the investigation, Colmer said he served warrants to freeze assets in the accounts, but virtually all of the funds were gone.

The affidavit said after Smith was taken into custody, he waived his right to remain silent and agreed

Remains of World War II Riverside Soldier Come Home 82 Years Later

RIVERSIDE (CNS) - A soldier from Riverside who died after the Japanese invaded the Philippines in World War II returned home to the United States Tuesday, for burial in his hometown.

U.S. Army Air Corps Pvt. Charles R. Powers was 18 when he died in July 1942 on the island of Luzon.

The National Cemetery Administration has arranged for the repatriation of Powers' remains for interment at Riverside National Cemetery on Thursday.

According to the nonprofit, Powers was attached to the 28th Material Squadron, 20th Air Base Group at Nichols Field south of Manila when the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor occurred on Dec. 7, 1941, followed immediately by a series of air assaults that largely decimated U.S. defense assets in the Philippines and led to the naval and ground invasion of the U.S.-held archipelago.

While what was left of American Army and Navy air forces retreated to the Dutch East Indies and Australia, ground personnel were left to try to fend off the Japanese invaders, culto be questioned, allegedly admitting "his fiduciary relationship with the victims ... and that he embezzled and spent the victims' money on personal expenses."

"Smith admitted he has little to no outside income and no reliable or consistent income," according to the affidavit.

The defendant has no documented prior felony or misdemeanor convictions in Riverside County.

minating in the surrender of the Bataan peninsula in April 1942 and Corregidor weeks later.

Powers was among the tens of thousands of U.S. personnel subjected to the infamous "Bataan Death March" into captivity. At Cabanatuan Prisoner of War Camp, he was imprisoned and among over 2,500 men who died there. Camp records show he passed on July 18, 1942, buried in a local cemetery.

"Although interred as an 'Unknown' ... Powers' grave was meticulously cared for over the past 70 years by the American Battle Monuments Commission, along with others still missing from WW II," Honoring Our Fallen said.

His identity was ultimately confirmed, leading to arrangements for the repatriation of his remains.

The funeral service on Thursday was for family only.

The city of Long Beach previously hosted archery, fencing, sailing and volleyball at the 1984 Games. Long Beach's Marine Stadium also hosted rowing events at the 1932 Games.

"The 2028 Olympic and Paralympic Games will reflect all that the Los Angeles area has to offer, and with these venue assignments, we're very proud to bring the Games to many of our vibrant and diverse communities," said LA28 Chief Athlete Officer Janet Evans.

"The city of Los Angeles will host more Olympic sports than anywhere else, and Carson and Long Beach, which hosted competitions in previous Games, will host more competitions than ever before."

Last month, the Los Angeles organizing committee proposed several venue assignments that move competitions outside of city boundaries, compared to its 2017 bid plan. Those changes require written consent from the city council, which is reviewing the proposal. The International Olympic Committee has already approved the changes.

How a 'Once in a Century' Broadband Investment Plan Could Go Wrong

BY KHARI JOHNSON,
CalMatters

Starting last week, California residents have 30 days to challenge maps that will determine how $1.8 billion is distributed to increase internet access in the state.

Actually getting the California Public Utilities Commission to accept changes to the federal maps is quite difficult, which internet access advocates with educational backgrounds are raising alarm over.

For example, after the COVID-19 pandemic hit and teachers at the Fresno Unified School District started teaching classes remotely, Philip Neufeld started work to ensure 70,000 students could log on.

Neufeld, a district IT worker and member of the Fresno Coalition for Digital Inclusion, started noticing patterns. He heard about students going to Taco Bell and McDonald's for WiFi to do their homework, but he saw comparatively low download speeds across entire neighborhoods, disparities that reminded him of redlining, the practice of denying people housing and wealth based on their race. Neufeld and a colleague built an open source tool to gather 14 million speed tests across Fresno over the span of two years.

"What it shows is that it's not just people in rural areas who have a real need for better internet," he said. "It's people in urban, low-income neighborhoods in apartment buildings and mobile home parks, and these patterns are showing up across multiple large cities that have higher poverty."

Data collected from students in Fresno mirrors "digital redlining" documented in other parts of the United States. But the government won't use data like the kind collected in Fresno to redraw a map that will decide how to distribute the money because Neufeld's data doesn't conform precisely to the strict challenge process that's been put in place. That's one of a number of ways advocacy groups say the process to challenge how funding for affordable high-speed internet is difficult. Some advocates have gone so far as to suggest the challenge process is broken by design.

'Once in a century' broadband funding

Shortly after the COVID-19 pandemic exposed areas of the digital divide — the gap between people with ready access to reliable internet and those who don't — for students and workers, Congress passed an infrastructure bill in 2021 to invest more than $42 billion in broadband internet projects in all 50 U.S. states and six territories. California got $1.8 billion for such projects. A U.S. Department of Commerce agency oversees the program and the California Public Utilities Commission distributes the money to local projects.

Government officials and advocates alike refer to the Broadband Equity Access and Deployment, or BEAD program, as a once in a generation or, as a contractor working with the California Public Utilities Commission put it, a "once in a century" investment in affordable high-speed internet access.

But advocates say maps compiled with data provided by internet service providers are highly inaccurate while the challenge process is short, arduous, and unfairly places the burden of proving that inaccuracy on people in areas unserved or underserved. They warn this could lead to the once in a generation money being misspent.

How to challenge government internet access maps

Anyone can visit a state online portal to find out if their home or nearby community institutions are designated as eligible for funding, or if the map inaccurately says they have internet access or adequate internet speed. They can use the same portal to run tests to challenge things about their home internet like speed or latency. Successful challenges can change a home designation, but there's no guarantee that the challenge will make a difference because only certain parties can challenge the maps.

Only local and tribal governments, internet service providers, and advocacy groups can demand changes to the map, and so in order for an individual who challenges claims about their internet access to be heard, one of these groups must verify the evidence gathered by an individual and claim their challenge in order for it to be recognized by state and federal agencies.

Among more than 80 such organizations registered to participate in the challenge process, roughly two dozen are municipal, county, or tribal governments.

To successfully challenge internet speeds, an individual must carry out speed tests three times a day over the span of three days and provide details. They must also subscribe to a broadband speed plan or the highest tier plan available from an internet service provider.

Inspired by Neufeld, Oakland Undivided did a similar speed test in late 2023 in partnership with the Oakland Unified School District and HubbleIQ. There they found that more than half of 18,000 students had download speeds that would qualify for BEAD funding and heat map patterns that resemble historical redlining. Speeds are 10 times better in high income neighborhoods in the area serviced by AT&T, Comcast, Sonic, and T-Mobile, but the FCC map shows that adequate coverage is nearly ubiquitous throughout the city of Oakland.

- PHILIP NEUFELD, IT WORKER, FRESNO UNIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT

"We've been talking with a lot of other digital equity coalitions around the state in Fresno, LA, and we kind of all agree that this process is designed to make it impossible for communities to submit data," said Patrick Messac, director of Oakland Undivided, a nonprofit organization started during the COVID-19 pandemic that last year critiqued a map for distributing billions of dollars for a state broadband program.

Because of the difficulty involved with collecting speed test data, Oakland Undivided changed focus from speed tests and the challenge process to instead seek greater internet availability for community institutions. But Messac, who also works in IT for the city of Oakland, worries that the federal broadband dollars could get depleted before places like schools, libraries, and Head Start centers would be in line for funding.

Today is the 201st day of 2024.
There are 165 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 19, 1848, the first "Convention to discuss the social, civil and religious condition and rights of Woman" convened at the Wesleyan Chapel in Seneca Falls, N.Y.

On this date:

In 1812, during the War of 1812, the First Battle of Sackets Harbor in Lake Ontario resulted in an American victory as U.S. naval forces repelled a British attack.

In 1969, Apollo 11 and its astronauts, Neil Armstrong, Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin and Michael Collins, went into orbit around the moon.

In 1975, the Apollo and Soyuz space capsules that were linked in orbit for two days separated.

In 1979, the Nicaraguan capital of Managua fell to Sandinista guerrillas, two days after President Anastasio Somoza fled the country.

In 1980, the Moscow Summer Olympics began, minus dozens of nations that were boycotting the games because of Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

In 1989, 111 people were killed when United Air Lines Flight 232, a DC-10 which sustained the uncontained failure of its tail engine and the loss of hydraulic systems, crashed while making an emergency landing at Sioux City, Iowa; 185 other people survived.

In 1990, baseball's all-time hits leader, Pete Rose, was sentenced in Cincinnati to five months in prison for tax evasion.

In 1993, President Bill Clinton announced a policy allowing gays to serve in the military under a compromise dubbed "don't ask, don't tell, don't pursue."

In 2006, prosecutors reported that Chicago police beat, kicked, shocked or otherwise tortured scores of Black suspects from the 1970s to the early 1990s to try to extract confessions from them.

In 2005, President George W. Bush announced his choice of federal appeals court judge John G. Roberts Jr. to replace Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. (Roberts ended up succeeding Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, who died in Sept. 2005; Samuel Alito followed O'Connor.)

In 2013, in a rare and public reflection on race, President Barack Obama called on the nation to do some soul searching over the death of Trayvon Martin and the acquittal of his shooter, George Zimmerman, saying the slain black teenager "could have been me 35 years ago."

In 2018, a duck boat packed with tourists capsized and sank in high winds on a lake in the tourist town of Branson, Missouri, killing 17 people.

In 2021, Paul Allard Hodgkins, a

Lucretia Mott, Quaker, feminist, women's rights activist and social reformer was the "moving spirit of the" Seneca Falls Convention.

Florida man who breached the U.S. Senate chamber on Jan. 6 carrying a Trump campaign flag, received an eight-month prison term; it was the first resolution for a felony case in the January 6th U.S. Capitol insurrection.

In 2022, Britain shattered its record for the highest temperature ever registered amid a heat wave that seared swaths of Europe.

How California Got Tough on Guns

BY BEN CHRISTOPHER, CalMatters

The modern American gun debate began in 1967, when 30 protesting members of the Black Panther Party marched into the California Capitol with loaded handguns, shotguns and rifles. In California there were few restrictions on carrying loaded weapons in public.

Soon a bill to ban "open carry" of loaded firearms within cities and towns sailed through and was signed by then-Gov. Ronald Reagan. It's hard to say which now seems more unlikely: that two dozen revolutionaries could legally stroll into the state Assembly chamber with semi-automatic rifles, or that a Republican governor would champion stricter gun control.

In the years since, California's progressive politicians have layered on restrictions while gun owners and manufacturers keep pushing back, particularly in the judiciary. The US Supreme Court has been particularly receptive: In 2022, a majority of the justices threw the future of many of California's strictest gun laws into question. The trend seemed to be fulfilling the prophecy of a National Rifle Association spokesperson that the Trump-altered Supreme Court meant "winter may very well be coming for gun laws in California."

Today California and 10 other states ban most semi-automatic rifles, including certain versions of most popular in America, the AR-15 — the gun used in the assassination attempt against former President Donald Trump, who has supported keeping such guns legal. In July of 2024, the U.S. Supreme Court rejected a challenge that contended an Illinois ban on rapid-fire guns violates the Second Amendment. That ensured California's prohibition could continue, for now — although critics say such guns can be, and still are, purchased here with a few modifications.

On the premise that the best defense is a good offense, Gov. Gavin Newsom and his allies in the Legislature in 2023 introduced a new, long-shot amendment to the US Constitution that would place age limits, background check requirements and mandatory waiting periods on gun purchasers, and ban the civilian ownership of so-

"LONGLEGS"

By Bob Garver

The gruesome horror movie "Longlegs" pulled something of an upset at this past weekend's domestic box office. It wasn't enough to upset "Despicable Me 4" for the #1 spot, but it did do the best among new releases. Great reviews were seemingly enough to pull the family-unfriendly indie darling into the #2 spot and make it the only movie to pull in half of what "Despicable Me 4" made. And to all the critics whose diligent word of mouth turned this scrappy upstart into a surprise hit, I have to say: you must have seen a different "Longlegs" than I did, because the movie I saw was a joke.

Maika Monroe stars as FBI agent Lee Harker. She's super-intuitive to the point where neither she nor the Bureau can figure out if she's psychic or just highly intelligent. Whatever the reason, she's competent enough for veteran agent Carter (Blair Underwood) to put her on a high-profile case. They're looking for a person of interest called Longlegs, connected to a series of family murders. The murders themselves are apparently committed by members of the respective families, but a cryptic, Satanic note attributed to Longlegs is always found at the scene. The mystery is, what's Longlegs' deal?

Nicolas Cage plays Longlegs, who I'd describe as a cross between "Silence of the Lambs" villain Buffalo Bill and Michael Jackson. But not actually-convincingly-creepy "Thriller" Michael Jackson, but screechy, ultra-white, only-unintentionally-creepy Michael Jackson. But at least Buffalo Bill was able to behave somewhat normally in a few scenes so he could plausibly fool victims and authorities. Longlegs doesn't have a single moment where he's not a total wackaloon. I'm convinced the only reason this movie is set in the 90's is because at any subsequent time, he'd be filmed on a phone and arrested - not for the murders, but for being a public nuisance. Some will say that he has to be taken seriously as a villain because of the gravity of the crimes in his vicinity, but even he knows he can't be taken seriously and needs to find a way around it.

It's clear that Longlegs is either mentally ill or demon-possessed.

The same can be said for Lee's hoarder mother Ruth (Alicia Witt), as well as minor characters with direct connections to the case like scene-stealing survivor Carrie Anne (Kiernan Shipka). But I can't for the life of me figure out why every actor in this movie has to play their part like a total weirdo. A crime lab specialist is quick to posit wild theories about a mysterious container. A mental hospital ward is so trusting that he doesn't check ID's on visitors. Even Lee is filled with quirks, like wanting nothing to do with Carter's daughter Ruby (Ava Kellers, herself playing her part with distracting stiffness). The lack of social grace wasn't funny when Dakota Johnson did it in "Madame Web" and it isn't funny here.

"Longlegs" would have worked better if more characters were played straight, so the odd ones would stand out more. Not that the odd ones don't stand out, but they have to overcompensate, hamming up their performances to ridiculous levels. Director Osgood Perkins clearly told every cast member, "we like weird, people!" apparently forgetting that it was both subtle and broad strokes that made his father Anthony such a memorable horror villain in "Psycho." Imagine if Norman Bates popped out in a dress in all his scenes instead of just one and you'll understand my problem with "Longlegs." The movie is effectively scary in some early scenes where we don't quite know the enemy, but it loses that effectiveness when the enemy, along with too many other characters, proves to be phony and silly.

Grade: C-

"Longlegs" is rated R for bloody violence, disturbing images and some language. Its running time is 101 minutes.

Richard Simmons, a Fitness Guru who Mixed Laughs and Sweat, Dies at 76

By MARK KENNEDY AP
Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Simmons, television's hyperactive court jester of physical fitness who built a mini-empire in his trademark tank tops and short shorts by urging the overweight to exercise and eat better, died Saturday. He turned 76 on Friday.

Simmons died at his home in Los Angeles, his publicist Tom Estey said in an email to The Associated Press. He gave no further details.

Los Angeles police and fire departments say they responded to a house — whose address the AP has matched with Simmons through public records — where a man was declared dead from natural causes.

Simmons, who had revealed a skin cancer diagnosis in March 2024, had lately dropped out of sight, sparking speculation about his health and well-being. His death was first reported by

TMZ.

Simmons was a former 268-pound teen who became a master of many media forms, sharing his hard-won weight-loss tips as host of the Emmy-winning daytime "Richard Simmons Show" and author of best-selling books and the diet plan Deal-A-Meal. He also opened exercise studios and starred in exercise videos, including the wildly successful "Sweatin' to the Oldies" line, which became a cultural phenomenon.

"My food plan and diet are just two words — common sense. With a dash of good humor," he told The Associated Press in 1982. "I want to help people and make the world a healthier, happy place."

Simmons embraced mass communication to get his message out, even as he eventually became the butt of jokes for his outfits and flamboyant flair. He was a sought-after guest on TV

Shannen Doherty, 'Beverly Hills, 90210' Star, Dies at 53

By LYNN ELBER AP
Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Shannen Doherty, the "Beverly Hills, 90210" star whose life and career were roiled by illness and tabloid stories, has died at 53.

After years with breast cancer, Doherty died Saturday, according to a statement from her publicist, Leslie Sloane.

"The devoted daughter, sister, aunt and friend was surrounded by her loved ones as well as her dog, Bowie. The family asks for their privacy at this time so they can grieve in peace," Sloane said Sunday. The news was first reported by People magazine.

Her illness was publicly revealed in a lawsuit filed in 2015 against her former business managers, in which she alleged they mismanaged her money and allowed her health insurance to lapse. She later shared intimate details of her treatment following a single mastectomy. In December 2016, she posted a photo of her first day of radiation, calling the treatment "frightening" for her.

In February 2020, Doherty revealed that the cancer had returned and was at Stage 4. She said she came forward because her health conditions could come out in court. The actor had sued insurance giant State Farm after her California home was damaged in a fire in 2018.

"I have no idea how long I'm going to be on the chemo for. ... That's not something that I can predict, it's not something my doctors can predict. And it's scary, it's like a big wake-up call," Doherty said on a late June episode of her podcast "Let's Be Clear," adding that a recent change in the shape of her cancer cells meant there were new treatment protocols for her to try. "For the first time in a couple months probably, I feel hopeful because there are so many more protocols now, whereas before I was hopeful — but I was still getting prepared."

A native of Memphis,

Tennessee, Doherty moved to Los Angeles with her family at age 7 and, within a few years, became an actor.

As a child star, she worked steadily in such TV series as "Little House on the Prairie," in which she played Jenny Wilder. She detoured as a teenager to the big screen in "Girls Just Want to Have Fun" (1985) and "Heathers."

In 1990, the doe-eyed, dark-haired actor won her breakout role as Brenda Walsh in producer Aaron Spelling's hit teenage melodrama set in posh Beverly Hills. She and Jason Priestley's Brandon, Brenda's twin brother, were fish-out-of-water Midwesterners.

But Doherty's fame came with media scrutiny and accounts of outbursts, drinking and impulsiveness — the latter most notably after a very brief marriage to actor George Hamilton's son, Ashley. Doherty's second marriage, in 2002, was to Rick Salomon and was annulled within a year. In 2011, Doherty married photographer Kurt Iswarienko. She filed for divorce in April 2023.

She left "Beverly Hills, 90210" at the end of its fourth season in 1994 (the show aired until 2000), reportedly removed by Spelling because of conflicts with her co-stars and chronic lateness.

But in her 1994 AP interview, Doherty described her life as peaceful.

shows led by Merv Griffin, Mike Douglas and Phil Donahue. But David Letterman would prank him and Howard Stern would tease him until he cried. He was mocked in Neil Simon's "The Goodbye Girl" on Broadway in 1993, and Eddie Murphy put on white makeup and dressed like him in "The Nutty Professor," screaming "I'm a pony!"

Asked if he thought he could motivate people by being silly, Simmons answered, "I think there's a time to be serious and a time to be silly. It's knowing when to do it. I try to have a nice combination. Being silly cures depression. It catches people off guard and makes them think. But in between that silliness is a lot of seriousness that makes sense. It's a different kind of training."

Simmons' daytime show was seen on 200 stations in America, as well as in Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Japan and South America. His first book, "Never Say Diet," was a smash best-seller.

He was known to counsel the severely obese, including Rosalie Bradford, who held records for being the world's heaviest woman, and Michael Hebranko, who credited Simmons for helping him lose 700 pounds. Simmons put real people — chubby, balding or non-telegenic — in his exercise videos to make the fitness goals seem reachable.

Throughout his career, Simmons was a reliable critic of fad diets, always emphasizing healthy eating and exercise plans. "There'll always be some weird thing about eating four grapes before you go to bed, or drinking a special tea, or buying this little bean from El Salvador," he told the AP in 2005 as the Atkins diet craze swept the country. "If you watch your portions and you have a good attitude and you work out every day you'll live longer, feel better and look terrific."

Simmons was a native of New Orleans, a chubby boy named Milton by his parents. (He renamed himself "Richard" around the age of 10 to improve his self-image). He would tell people he ate to excess because he believed his parents liked his older brother more. He was teased by schoolmates and ballooned to almost 200 pounds.

Simmons told the AP his mother watched exercise guru Jack LaLanne's TV show religiously when he was growing up, but he wasn't crazy about the fitness fanatic. "I hated him," Simmons said. "I wasn't ready for his message because he was fit and he was healthy and he had such a positive attitude, and I was none of those things."

Simmons went to Italy as a foreign exchange student and ended up doing peanut butter commercials and bacchanalian eating scenes for director Federico Fellini in his film "Fellini Satyricon." He told the AP: "I was fat, had curly hair. The Italians thought I was hysterical. I was the life of the party."

His life changed after getting an anonymous letter. "One dark, rainy day I went to my car and found a note. It said, 'Dear Richard, you're very funny, but fat people die young. Please don't die.' He was so stunned that he went on the starvation diet that left him thin but very ill.

After the crash diet he gained back 65 pounds. Eventually, he was able to devise a sensible plan to take off the pounds and keep them off. "I went into the business because I couldn't find anything I liked," he said.

One of the online tributes after Simmons' passing was from actor-comedian Pauly Shore, who previously developed an unauthorized biopic of Simmons, which Simmons objected to at the time.

"I just got word like everyone else that the beautiful Richard Simmons has passed," he began in an Instagram post. "I hope you're at peace and twinkling up in the heavens," adding "You're one of a kind, Richard. An amazing life. An amazing story."

Guns and Domestic Violence: A Dangerous Combination for Everyone

Seventy. That's the number of women, on average, who are shot and killed each month in this country by a husband or partner, according to a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention data analysis. Gun violence is now the leading cause of death for U.S. children and teens – ahead of car accidents and cancer.

In June, the U.S. Supreme Court affirmed that the government can continue denying firearms to people subject to court-ordered domestic violence protective orders. "Continuing this common-sense safety measure, which has been making our families and communities safer for de-CADES, was important," says Esta Soler, founder and president of Futures Without Violence (FUTURES), a leading U.S. violence prevention group. "But it only means we didn't take a step backward that would make things even worse."

Domestic violence is a grave and prevalent problem that becomes even more deadly when guns are present. A firearm in the home makes it a stunning five times more likely that a woman facing domestic violence will be killed by a male partner. So there's an urgent need to take guns away from abusers.

And what starts at home doesn't stay at home. When domestic abusers can access guns, communities become more dangerous. Multiple studies have found that a majority of the mass shootings that plague the United States involve some connection to domestic violence or are committed by a shooter who has a history of domestic violence.

"Gun violence is everywhere, and it affects all of us," Soler says. "The status quo simply can't continue. We need to do more to prevent gun violence in our homes and communities, protect survivors of domestic and sexual violence, and help heal the people who've been harmed by this violence."

To do all that, FUTURES is working to educate judges about the importance of ensuring that people subject to restraining orders actually surrender their firearms. Right now, some states and jurisdictions require abusers to provide proof they relinquished their firearms, but most do not. Similarly, some individual judges demand proof, but most do not. Many experts want lawmakers, law enforcement, and judges to improve relinquishment procedures, ensure compliance, and act when a perpetrator fails to hand over his guns.

And FUTURES is asking Congress to:

- Close the so-called boyfriend (or dating partner) loophole in federal law to deny access to firearms to dating partners (not just spouses) who have restraining orders against them, and to those convicted of stalking.

- Invest more resources in both helping children and youth exposed to violence and trauma recover and heal.
- Provide more support for the strategies proven to prevent domestic violence and gun violence in communities and more resources to deter future criminal behavior.

Learn more about this work here: www.futureswithoutviolence.org

"Guns and domestic violence are a public health crisis, but it's one we can address," Soler adds. "These are steps that will make our homes and communities safer. There's no time to waste." (StatePoint)

"What we are finding, and others have noted as well, is that the National Map overstates coverage," said Adeyinka Ogunlegan, the vice president of government affairs and policy for EducationSuperhighway.

That group is focused on improving internet speeds in apartment buildings since roughly 1 in 4 people who lack internet access live there. It's one of the only organizations nationwide planning to mount challenges in all 50 U.S. states, with 800 planned challenges in California alone. EducationSuperhighway is also choosing to focus on availability challenges instead of speed tests. Ogunlegan wouldn't go so far as to say the challenge process is designed to fail, but said it's difficult for organized groups that have followed the process for years to participate, so it must be challenging for the average individual as well. Making people call internet service providers instead of using an online tool, for example, makes it harder to gather evidence that an internet provider does not offer services at your address.

John Windhausen is executive director of Schools, Health, and Libraries Broadband Coalition, a nonprofit organization with hundreds of member groups. He's hearing from members that the challenge process is very difficult.

"We are concerned that internet service providers allege that they serve areas but many locations cannot receive the level of service required by the BEAD program," he said.

Alexis Schrubbe is director of the Internet Equity Initiative at the University of Chicago and a member of the National Broadband Mapping Coalition. She helped make an open source tool for residents to carry out speed tests and agrees with other broadband experts who say the map for allocating the federal funding overstates coverage. She encourages anyone dissatisfied with their internet to mount a challenge and take the opportunity to participate. It can seem like a lot of labor but it's really not for a once-in-a-lifetime chance.

"This is everybody's best chance to have their complaint heard, so they should take advantage of it," she said. "Don't be afraid to ask questions, and don't be intimidated by the process. It's our best chance to make the maps right and to stand up and advocate for ourselves."

"(California) should be a leader in this space"

The challenge process for the federal money in California begins July 8 and ends Aug. 5. After the public submits challenges to the map, internet service providers get their chance to rebut those challenges. The California Public Utilities Commission expects to make final determinations by the end of the year.

Initiatives to narrow the digital divide started to backslide in recent months with the loss of the federal Affordable Connectivity Program subsidy in April.

In more positive news, 10 affordable broadband projects received initial approval last week. The public utilities commission is slated to make a final decision with a vote in August. Also last week: the Federal Communications Commission said it plans to modernize its E-Rate program. A change, if adopted at a July 18 meeting, would allow more schools access to funding to loan students Wi-Fi hotspots for use at home.

Both internet service providers and groups passionate about ending the digital divide are campaigning for AB 2239, a draft bill that defines digital discrimination to broadband internet access and allows city attorneys and district attorneys to file suit against internet service providers.

However the challenge process turns out, Neufeld wants state education groups to continue to routinely run speed tests on devices loaned to students. If anonymized and made into a formal process, the tests could inform broadband investments or prove patterns of neglect that can lead to legal action under AB 2239 in order to hold internet service providers to account.

"We [California] should be a leader in this space," he said. "There's no reason at a state level that we couldn't have a better way of mapping users' real experience."

Chicken Flautas

So, after making the big batch of shredded chicken (see last week's recipe) I had a lot of shredded chicken to use. I threw it in Caesar salads. I made Buffalo chicken dip. I also made flautas. Flautas are closely related to taquitos but made with flour tortillas instead of corn.

I had never made them before, but they are pretty darn easy. The only thing you need to be careful about is having the correct oil temperature.

But a good rule of thumb is if you see the oil smoking, it is too hot.

These were great served with shredded lettuce, sour cream, and salsa.

Ingredients

- Flour tortilla
- Shredded chicken
- Frying oil (soy, canola, avocado, vegetable, etc)
- Toothpicks

To Make

On a stove top, heat a pan on medium heat. Fill pan with about ½ inch deep of oil. On a cutting board or other work surface place a tortilla.

Add shredded chicken in a straight line from the bottom to the top. Roll the tortilla from one side over the chicken to the other until you have a cigar shape. Place a toothpick through the tortilla, chicken and out the other side. This will hold the flauta together while frying. Place flauta into the oil and fry on each side for about 30-60 seconds. It does not take long so be sure to pay attention on this step. Pull the flauta out. Let sit on a drying rack or paper towel to let the excess oil fall or dry off. Plate and EAT!

Doherty

"It must be, if you pick up the Enquirer and find the only thing they can write about me is that I installed a pay phone next to my house and was seen at Stroud's (a discount bed-and-bath chain) buying $1,400 worth of bed linens and wouldn't go to an expensive store," she said. "It must be calm if they're pulling that stuff out of their heads."

Three years later, in 1997, Doherty was sentenced to anger-management counseling by a Beverly Hills Municipal Court judge after she allegedly smashed a beer bottle onto a man's windshield during a quarrel. After a 2001 drunken driving arrest, she pleaded no contest and was ordered to serve five days in a work-release program.

Doherty reunited with Spelling when he cast her in 1998 as Prue Halliwell in "Charmed." In an AP interview that year, the actor expressed regrets about her past.

"We had a few bumps along the road, but golly, who doesn't?" said Spelling, who died in 2006. "Everything Shannen did was blown out of proportion by the rag sheets."

Doherty's lawsuit against her ex-business managers was settled in 2016. She was open about the toll that cancer was taking. She posted photos that showed the baldness that followed treatment and, in an August 2016 interview with "Entertainment Tonight," shared her fears.

"The unknown is always the scariest part," she said. "Is the chemo going to work? Is the radiation going to work?" she said. "Pain is manageable, you know living without a breast is manageable, it's the worry of your future and how your future is going to affect the people that you love."

Doherty advocated for cancer awareness and care, and spoke to the AP in 2021 about how spending years with the disease affected her life and sense of optimism.

"When you get something like cancer, your tolerance for drama is zero. I don't like people wasting my time. I don't like negativity," she said. "It's odd because I think if you look back, you're like, 'Oh, gosh, it's so much drama around her,' but I don't think I was necessarily into the drama. I just think if we took young 18-year-old Shannen, 19-year-old Shannen, and we took her and planted her like right now, I would be a nerd and nobody would be writing about me."

Gnatalie

While fossils are typically brown from silica or black from iron minerals, green is rare because celadonite forms in volcanic or hydrothermal conditions that typically destroy buried bones. The celadonite entered the fossils when volcanic activity around 50 million to 80 million years ago made it hot enough to replace a previous mineral.

The dinosaur lived 150 million years ago in the late Jurassic Era, making it older than Tyrannosaurus rex — which lived 66 million to 68 million years ago.

Researchers discovered the bones in 2007 in the Badlands of Utah.

"Dinosaurs are a great vehicle for teaching our visitors about the nature of science, and what better than a green, almost 80-foot-long dinosaur to engage them in the process of scientific discovery and make them reflect on the wonders of the world we live in!" Luis M. Chiappe of the museum's Dinosaur Institute said in a statement about his team's discovery.

Matt Wedel, anatomist and paleontologist at Western University of Health Sciences in Pomona near Los Angeles, said he heard "rumors of a green dinosaur way back when I was in graduate school."

When he glimpsed the bones while they were still being cleaned, he said they were "not like anything else that I've ever seen."

The dinosaur is similar to a sauropod species called Diplodocus, and the discovery will be published in a scientific paper next year. The sauropod, referring to a family of massive herbivores that includes the Brontosaurus and Brachiosaurus, will be the biggest dinosaur at the museum and can be seen this fall in its new welcome center.

John Whitlock, who teaches at Mount Aloysius College, a private Catholic college in Cresson, Pennsylvania, and researches sauropods, said it was exciting to have such a complete skeleton to help fill in the blanks for specimens that are less complete.

"It's tremendously huge, it really adds to our ability to understand both taxonomic diversity ... but also anatomical diversity," Whitlock said.

The dinosaur was named "Gnatalie" last month after the museum asked for a public vote on five choices that included Verdi, a derivative of the Latin word for green; Olive, after the small green fruit symbolizing peace, joy, and strength in many cultures; Esme, short for Esmeralda, which is Spanish for Emerald; and Sage, a green and iconic L.A. plant also grown in the Natural History Museum's Nature Gardens.
