How a Library Card Can Take You Beyond the Pages

By Mia Rotell

Owning a library card means access to books, movies, Wi-Fi and so much more. But one perk of having a library card goes much deeper than the shelves.

Did you know that public libraries across California can offer their cardholders access to free passes for California state parks — all through a library card?

"Something we offer here (at the City of Perris Public Library) is the park pass," said Ashley Horton, a librarian at the Perris Public Library.

One Attack, Many Americas: Why 9/11 and Its Many Grievs Land Differently 25 Years Later

By DEEPTI HAJELA Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — When the planes crashed and the buildings fell on that sunny September morning 25 years ago, the shock waves of dismay and grief went far past downtown New York City, rural western Pennsylvania and just outside Washington, D.C.

They radiated through every part of the United States in communities large and small, tearing at Americans' sense of safety and their place in the world. Hearts were broken across the nation, not just of those who lost their loved ones but among strangers who mourned for them, the Sept. 11 attacks leaving no one unaffected in an unwanted moment of horrifying togetherness.

A quarter of a century later, the effects linger. We all live in a post-9/11 world, with its security strictures and surveillance. But here's the thing: Americans don't all live in the SAME one. What the attacks and their aftermath have come to mean isn't a single viewpoint shared by everyone, for reasons chronological, political and personal.

It's a tapestry of meaning and grief as varied as the nation in which 9/11 took place.

So many things affect our understanding

It's somewhat inevitable. After all, the mere passage of time means tens of millions of young Americans have been born since then. For them, 9/11 is something to learn about in history lessons.

But people's views of 9/11 and its aftermath have also been shaped by human factors like policies and actions taken by those in power. And the America that was attacked was already a nation with its own history and tensions, with stress points of dispute and disagreement put under additional strain by the catastrophic event.

"The same event, whether it's a disaster or a shock or even the recovery process is completely different depending on your network," says Daniel Aldrich, a professor at Northeastern University who studies communities and resilience.

Why a Bill to Juice Condo Construction Died Even Though California Lawmakers Voted for It

BY BEN CHRISTOPHER,
Calmatters

A bill that supporters hoped would kickstart California's moribund condo industry and boost the scarce number of entry-level homeownership opportunities, died under mysterious circumstances at the stroke of midnight on Tuesday after failing to get a final vote before the end of the legislative session.

Assembly Bill 1903 by Oakland Democratic lawmaker Buffy Wicks would have changed the way that disputes between homeowners and builders over purportedly shoddy construction are resolved in a way the bill's author hoped would result in fewer defect lawsuits and less developer skittishness around building condos.

Backed by real estate interests, "Yes In My Backyard" advocates and a bevy of city governments, the bill sailed through the Senate without objection on Monday after 11:15 p.m.

But in a legislative mystery with weighty implications for California's dysfunctional housing market, it never made its way back to the Assembly. At midnight, the legislative session officially came to a close. The bill had already passed the Assembly the prior week. But lacking an obligatory "concurrence" vote needed to lock in the final amendments, the bill died quietly without facing a single "no" vote in either chamber.

In a statement released on Tuesday afternoon, Wicks said that she was "incredibly disappointed and frustrated" that the bill "was ultimately held by the Senate."

"We put hundreds of hours, months of negotiations, and endless stakeholders engagement and coalition building," she said. "Ultimately I had a bill Friday morning that I truly believe would have unlocked condo construction to serve our working class families desperate for homeownership opportunities."

A spokesperson for Senate President Pro Tem Monique Limón, a Santa Barbara Democrat, did not respond to a request for comment.

The bill was closely watched by pro-development advocates, who championed it as a key to unlocking the type of naturally affordable for-sale construction that the state so desperately needs.

But the bill had been opposed throughout the year by the politically powerful Consumer Attorneys of California, a lobbying group representing civil trial lawyers, along with many homeowners associations. Both argued that the bill would make it unduly hard for homeowners to take irresponsible builders to court over legitimately defective construction.

Those groups stopped fighting the bill when Wicks agreed to water it down over the weekend. Stripping out language that would have specified the types of defects ripe for litigation and placed new restrictions on how defects can be identified, the final bill simply required homeowners to clearly document the defects before filing suit, to give the builder a chance to repair them first and, if those repairs were made complete, to absolve the builder of future liability.

But it was too late. Wicks, in her statement, said she was confident the backers of the bill could "bring back something even stronger" in future sessions.

A spokesperson for the Consumer Attorneys of California did not respond to an interview request before this story was published.

When a bill dies at midnight

The final hours of August 31 in even years are always frantic in the Capitol.

State law requires the Legislature to dispense with most bills by the end of August at the end of each two-year legislative session. The rules also require any given bill to be in print for 72 hours before they can get a vote. "There are always a handful of bills that don't make it across the finish line," said Chris Micheli, a seasoned Sacramento lobbyist.

One of the most notable examples in recent memory was SB 1120 from 2020, another high profile and contentious housing bill. Incidentally, it was Wicks who went viral after taking to the Assembly floor, masked and holding her newborn daughter, to unsuccessfully plead with her colleagues to pass the bill on time. (Another version of the same policy to allow for duplex construction in neighborhoods zoned just for single-family homes passed the following year).

Another bill from this year, SB 1013 by Riverside Democratic Sen. Sabrina Cervantes, which would have put new restrictions on automated license plate readers, was unceremoniously held in the Assembly and did not receive a final vote. That was the victim of "an inter-house hostage situation," Politico reported Tuesday.

When a bill dies this way it can be hard to tell whether that's the result of simple time mismanagement or malign political intent — either directed at the bill itself or born of a general political beef between the two often quarrelsome chambers.

"I suspect the answer to your question is 'yes,'" said Dan Dunmoyer, president of the California Building Industry Association, a trade group that was pushing the bill. "It appears this bill was slow walked — or not walked at all. But I can't tell if this is truly hostage taking or things just got jammed up."

The final amendments to the construction defect bill were negotiated between Wicks and an apparently skeptical Sen. Tom Umberg, a Santa Ana Democrat and chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who shared the concerns of trial attorneys and HOAs. Those discussions dragged out until virtually the last possible moment on Friday evening, just over 72 hours before the end of session.

"The chair was moving the goal posts and running out the clock," said Michael Lane, a lobbyist with SPUR, a Bay Area-based urban planning think tank and advocacy group. "There's probably lots of blame to go around, but I think he was being very sly."

Umberg's office also did not respond to a request for comment.

Much ado about condos

Builders, but also pro-housing advocates, have argued for years that current state law incentivizes construction defect lawsuits against condominium projects. That's because condos are stacked together, making shared defects more likely across homeowners. The close cohabitation and the existence of homeowners associations make it easier for many litigants to organize against a single builder.

In California, where new residential construction is largely bifurcated between pricey single homes built for buyers and apartment buildings constructed for renters, condos represent a more affordable sweet spot. But developers have been more reluctant to build condos over the last two decades. Supporters of the bill blame litigation.

Comprehensive data on construction defect lawsuits does not exist. Reliable estimates on condominium production are also sparse.

Seven People Arrested for Alleged Retail Theft in Perris

PERRIS (CNS) - Seven people were arrested as part of a retail theft operation in Perris, authorities said Saturday.

The operation was conducted Friday in the 1800 block of Perris Boulevard in an attempt to address retail theft in the area.

Those arrested were allegedly observed stealing merchandise by deputies assigned to the Robbery Burglary Suppression Team and Special Enforcement Team at the Riverside County Sheriff's Department's Perris station.

The following suspects were arrested during the operation, according to the sheriff's department:

-- Emmitt Love, 45-year-old resident of Perris, arrested for grand theft and petty theft with priors.

-- Francisco Gonzalez, 33-year-old resident of Homeland, arrested for probation violation and burglary.

-- Carballo Iber, 18-year-old resident of Nuevo, arrested for petty theft.

-- Wendy Mejia, 23-year-old resident of Perris, arrested for petty theft and conspiracy.

-- Samantha Casas, 19-year-old resident of Perris, arrested for petty theft and conspiracy.

-- Jazmin Davila, 41-year-old resident of Perris, arrested for petty theft with priors.

Horton said library cardholders can check out a California State Library Parks Pass, which provides free vehicle day-use entry at more than 200 participating California State Park units throughout California.

The program was established as part of California's 2021-22 state budget and is part of Governor Gavin Newsom's "Outdoors for All" initiative, which aims to make California's parks and open spaces more accessible to people — regardless of their ZIP code or income.

The pass can be used at participating parks throughout the state, including San Clemente State Beach, California Citrus State Historic Park and Salton Sea State Recreation Area.

However, the pass does not provide free camping. It is specifically for vehicle day-use entry and also does not cover certain additional fees, such as special events, tours, boat use or other supplemental charges.

The pass can also be used for multiple day-use visits to participating state parks while it is checked out — which is subject to the specific library's checkout period and the program's rules.

For library cardholders, the program offers another way to turn a simple library card into a gateway to the outdoors. It provides opportunities to explore beaches, mountains, deserts, historic sites and other state park destinations — without paying the regular vehicle day-use fee.

Port of LA Caps Busiest Three Months with High Cargo Volume in August

WILMINGTON) - Waterfront workers processed 955,907 twenty-foot equivalent units in August at the Port of Los Angeles, capping what officials have described as the busiest three-month period in the port's history.

The port's executive director, Gene Seroka, announced Wednesday that workers processed more than 2.9 million TEUs across docks throughout June, July and August. August volume was 6% above the port's five-year average for the month and on par with figures from last year.

"We've put together an exceptionally strong summer in Los Angeles," Seroka said during his monthly virtual briefing. "Resilient consumer demand, early holiday shipments and a broad mix of cargo have all contributed to that strength."

Seroka noted the port has good momentum as it heads into the final months of the year.

"September is shaping up to be another strong month, and Los Angeles is well positioned to respond as global trade patterns continue to evolve," he said.

Loaded imports reached 500,302 TEUs in August, which came in nearly even compared to last year and 7% above the five-year August average. Loaded exports totaled 115,561 TEUs, representing a 9% decrease compared to August 2025.

Empty containers totaled 340,044 TEUs, a year-over-year 4% increase. During the first eight months of 2026, the port handled a little more than 7 million TEUs, 1.5% ahead of the same period last year and 5% above its five-year pace.

During the briefing, Seroka said trans-Pacific freight rates to the West Coast favor East Coast routings, while the speed of moving cargo through Los Angeles and onto rail can make the overall economics attractive for importers serving markets across the country.

Seroka was joined by Brian Dodge, president and CEO of the Retail Industry Leaders Association. Dodge explained that retailers remain optimistic about the holiday shopping season despite higher fuel costs, tariffs and other economic pressures.

"We've had an incredibly resilient consumer over the course of the last several years through a variety of different disruptions, and the same seems to be the case right now as we head into the holiday shopping season," Dodge said.

He noted that a large share of holiday merchandise is already in the United States after retailers moved goods earlier this year amid uncertainty over fuel prices and other supply chain disruptions, while additional shipments will continue as retailers replenish inventories to meet consumer demand.

On Sept. 11, 2001, nearly 3,000 people were killed as 19 al-Qaida hijackers seized control of four jetliners, sending two of the planes into New York's World Trade Center, one into the Pentagon in Arlington, Virginia, and the fourth into a field in western Pennsylvania. It remains the deadliest terror attack in history.

Cyclospora Outbreak Followed Years of Declining FDA Foreign Inspections

By MATTHEW
PERRONE AP Health
Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A nationwide outbreak of cyclospora tied to contaminated lettuce has heightened safety concerns about imported food, while underscoring a longer-term trend: U.S. regulators are conducting fewer international inspections to catch contaminated produce before it lands on American plates.

Food and Drug Administration inspections of foreign food sites — including the Mexican farm linked to the ongoing outbreak — are down nearly 35% since 2019, the year before the COVID-19 pandemic, according to agency records reviewed by The Associated Press. The pandemic kicked off a wave of retirements and departures among FDA inspectors that continues to this day.

Even before COVID-19, the agency had long failed to hit its congressionally mandated targets for international inspections. And recent staffing cuts, reorganizations and other upheavals under President Donald Trump could mean even fewer inspections in the years ahead, according to former senior FDA officials.

"When you look at the numbers of inspections balanced against the responsibility of the FDA — in terms of all the firms domestically and internationally under its oversight — the agency just can't achieve what is required," said Michael Rogers, who spent nearly 35 years in various inspection roles within the agency. He added that FDA continues to do many things "very well with limited resources."

The Trump administration has proposed new approaches to stretch agency resources — including a pilot program of one-day inspections. Rogers and other officials say the abbreviated in-

But developers claim that such lawsuits are a near certainty for condo projects.

"One hundred percent of our condos are sued for defect," said Dunmoyer in an earlier interview. "If the trial lawyers convince the legislature that it's okay to file a defect claim when there's no defect, then we just don't build condos. It's not complicated."

One recent analysis conducted by the consulting firm Economic & Planning Systems estimated that the threat of litigation increased construction costs on condos by roughly 1.9% to 4.4%. That may not be a massive cost increase, but supporters of the bill argue that it's enough to steer multifamily developers toward rental projects.

Those networks can exist in a range of ways and layers. Among them: those who lost loved ones; those who spent months clearing the rubble and debris from ground zero; those who were motivated to join the military; those who lost jobs in hard-hit industries like tourism and air transportation; those who came from certain countries and communities viewed with heightened suspicion after the attacks.

Different networks overlap in Jenna McPartland's family. She was expecting her first child with her husband, Ariel Jacobs, who was killed at the World Trade Center. She gave birth days later to their son, Gabriel, whose life was irrevocably altered by an event he didn't experience.

In the years since, McPartland remarried twice, had two younger sons with no biological tie to their older brother's dad and has been a stepmom to two teenagers for the last decade. Even as she added new chapters to her life, she made sure Gabi was connected to his father's family, and that her younger sons also knew that Sept. 11 was part of their larger family story.

"My middle boy wrote his college entrance essay on being the child of a 9/11 family, but not being the 9/11 kid. And how he wouldn't exist had his brother's dad not died," says McPartland, 52, a chef and restaurant owner in Fairfield, Connecticut. "They all acknowledge it in different ways, they feel it in different ways, they sense it in their lives in different ways."

Varied events play a role in the impact on people

Also playing a role in the impact, and even grief, caused by 9/11: choices that were made after the attacks by the U.S. government like the restructuring of government agencies and the creation of the Department of Homeland Security, along with foreign policy decisions like the invasion of Afghanistan.

Immigration had already been a contentious issue before the attack: Who should be allowed to come? Who could stay? What did it mean to be American, and who could claim it? After Sept. 11, it took on another dimension of added fear and suspicion. And much of it fell on people of Muslim faith or coming from Muslim-majority parts of the world.

For example, in 2002, the federal government implemented the National Security Entry-Exit Registration System, which required non-U.S. citizen males over 16 from 25 countries, almost all of them Muslim-majority, to register at certain ports of entry or at immigration offices if they were already in the country. Critics condemned it as racial and religious profiling, and it was dismantled in the following decade.

"The idea that there's this outside threat in the form of people who look like this or from particular countries really fueled the reorganization of the Department of Homeland Security and has continued to fuel the ways in which we've funded and contributed to the securitization of our immigration system and society more broadly," says Jayesh Rathod, a professor at Georgetown Law.

That lingers in the existence of the Transportation Security Administration and the general hardening of security measures in society overall.

A view of the New York skyline, with One World Trade Center, during an FDNY memorial to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the 9/11 attacks, Wednesday, Sept. 9, 2026, in the Staten Island borough of New York.

"The idea that we need to do everything possible to protect ourselves from whatever this threat is, amorphous threat, has become totally normalized," Rathod says.

The post-9/11 environment also saw the creation of Immigration and Customs Enforcement, which is now part of the public's awareness as the agency carrying out aggressive and highly controversial immigration crackdowns under the Trump administration.

And in a land where racism, xenophobia and stereotypes were part of the landscape, people in other communities felt it too, like Balbir Singh Sodhi, the Arizona gas station owner shot and killed four days after the 9/11 attacks. His assailant killed Sodhi, a bearded and turbaned member of the Sikh faith, assuming he was Arab.

The impact felt by Muslim Americans and others has been part of what Vida Lashgari has learned about the attacks that took place a few years before she was born. Raised in California, her mom Mexican and her dad Persian, the 21-year-old says she "grew up learning about how 9/11 particularly impacted Middle Easterners, Sikhs, brown people as a whole and how that kind of changed their everyday life."

Her father, she says, and "many Middle Easterners, became more hyper-aware of their appearance, their difference in the way they spoke and dressed in the U.S. after 9/11. And that kind of fear, I think, has carried throughout the Middle Eastern community since then."

Time passes, and new events take place

While she heard about her father's experiences and those in her communities, it's still been history for Lashgari and others like her, born in the years since 2001.

They're a generation that can't believe people used to be able to meet visitors inside at airport gates instead of being kept outside. They learned about it in school, the way they did about Pearl Harbor or the Civil War, but didn't quite know how something could divide life into before and after.

But another seismic event in American culture gave some of them a way to understand the starkness of before and after: the COVID-19 pandemic.

"The pandemic shook up so many lives, especially in my generation who had not experienced some sort of drastic change like that ... I think it definitely gave me perspective that there are some things that we can't be protected from," Lashgari says.

COVID "was, to this day, the closest I've ever felt to my world changing overnight and knowing I had no control over it," she says.

That an event, no matter how catastrophic and impactful, takes up less space in public memory and is supplanted by new ones is, after all, how history works. That reality is part of what drives efforts to create memorials and museums, says Amy Sodaro, a sociology professor at the Borough of Manhattan Community College, who studies them.

Having experienced 9/11, she herself initially thought it "would shape the rest of my life and the society that we live in," she says. But other events, political shifts, and major changes that have taken place in the years since made a difference as well.

It's "these other geopolitical events and changes to our world," she says, "that have changed the face of 9/11 in historical memory at the collective level — and I think also at the level of individuals."

TAKE CHEAP TO CHIC THIS FALL WITH ONLY PAINT AND BAKING SODA

By Mia Rotell and Lauren Rotell

Before you spend $30 on a fall decoration, check your craft closet! Did you know you can take any small plastic Halloween or fall decoration, slather on a paint-and-baking-soda mixture to give it a new look? Simple decorations become something straight out of a home magazine! The texture, color, and finish is what transforms it into a showstopping piece that costs about seven dollars and a crisp autumnal afternoon — so, grab your coffee, your plastic decoration and get to mixing!

What You Need

Acrylic paint

A paintbrush that can be thrown away afterward

A plastic Halloween or fall decoration

Baking soda

A small bowl to mix the paint and baking soda together

Parchment paper or something to place the object on while it dries

How to Make It

Step 1: Place a sheet of parchment paper on your work surface.

Step 2: Grab your mixing bowl and squeeze in enough paint to cover the surface of your decoration.

Step 3: Sprinkle baking soda into the paint mixture a little bit at a time. A thick texture is desirable, but avoid creating clumps. Mix until the baking soda is evenly incorporated and there are no clumps.

Step 4: You'll know the paint mixture is ready when it is thick from the baking soda but still wet like regular paint.

Step 5: Heavily brush the mixture onto your decoration, making sure to cover the surface evenly.

Step 6: Let it dry for about 30 minutes, then come back and brush on another coat if you want a thicker heavier finish or if your object is bigger.

Step 7: Let it dry for another 30 minutes and add another coat if desired.

Step 8: Let the decoration dry completely, and you're done!

Tip: Take an eyeshadow brush, dip it into a dark color of eyeshadow, and accentuate the shadows on your decoration to give it more dimension. This works especially well with skulls, pumpkins, ghosts, and more! While the layer is drying, lightly brush your paintbrush over it to give it some extra texture.

THESE BULBS HAVE EVOLVED TO AVOID BEING EATEN. YOU CAN TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THAT

By JESSICA DAMIANO
Associated Press

There's little worse in a gardener's mind than watching their careful planning and hard work go up in a cloud of teeth, thanks to every four-legged freeloader within chewing distance.

So if you're planting bulbs this fall, select the rights to avoid planting dinner.

Although no plant is 100% animal-proof, some spring-blooming bulbs have toxic or unpalatable self-defenses that deer, rabbits and rodents tend to avoid.

Pet owners and parents, however, should exercise caution when deciding to grow these within reach of children or furry family members.

Let's start with the most offensive bulbs

Crown imperials aren't referred to as "stink lilies" for nothing. One whiff of the malodorous, tufted, downward-facing, bell-shaped flowers will transport you to a skunk sanctuary — or a sweaty locker room. No self-respecting living thing would deliberately sniff, let alone eat, any part of the plant, which also contains highly toxic steroidal alkaloids.

But don't let that dissuade you from planting them. The striking plants not only keep rodents away, but they attract pollinators and are exceptionally eye-catching in the spring garden. Just don't plant them near the front walk.

Alliums are related to onions, and their bulbs' scent makes no secret of it, so they're typically left undisturbed. Their flowers have a similar, although milder, fragrance. If rabbits are particularly hungry, they might attempt a nibble, but the bitter sulfur compounds in the bulbs, leaves and stems will send them running. The plants are also toxic.

Similarly, all types of daffodils — from demure jonquils to giant trumpet types — contain bitter, toxic properties that most critters know to avoid.

These bulbs aren't as offensive but they are off-putting

Although nicely scented to us humans, the strong, sweet perfume emanating from Dutch hyacinth flowers is off-putting to many animals, as is the fruity scent of the unrelated grape hyacinth, which deer and rabbits perceive as musky. Neither is as offensive as pungent alliums, but both hyacinths also contain toxic compounds that cause mouth irritation and stomach upset if bitten or ingested.

Spanish bluebells contain saponins, which smell and taste like soap, as well as poisonous cardiac glycosides.

Snowdrops, Siberian squill, anemone, glory of the snow, winter aconite and star of Bethlehem are smaller, so-called "minor" bulbs with flowers that bloom earlier than the larger bulbs above. But they pack a punch in deterring wildlife browsing, thanks to their unpalatable smell, bitter taste and/or toxic compounds.

Because they have strong defenses, multiply readily and are not kept under control by animals, some of these plants, particularly Siberian squill, Spanish bluebells and star of Bethlehem, can quickly become invasive, so plant with caution.

Mix the offensive bulbs with other bulbs that animals love

All of these plants have spent generations using their natural defenses to avoid being eaten, and you can take advantage of that, too.

If you'd like to plant bulbs that animals love to eat, such as tulips or crocuses, try surrounding them with unpalatable ones. As they exude odors and chemicals to protect themselves, some of those defenses will extend to their bedmates.

"BY ANY MEANS"

By Bob Garver

"By Any Means" is a movie about two disparate FBI employees that can't decide if it wants to be a "Buddy Cop" movie or not. The pair are mismatched, but are they "comically" mismatched? The pair banter, is there enough banter to qualify for the "Buddy Cop" label? There's action, but is the action too violent and intense for a term as casual as "Buddy Cop"? The result is an uneven tone that makes the movie too dark for matinee action fans and too ridiculous for true-crime aficionados.

The movie takes place in 1966, primarily in Mississippi. Local agent Wayne Strider (Yahya Abdul Mateen II) is eager to prove that he, as a Black man, can handle more than a desk job. He also wants to help in the investigation into the murder of civil rights activist and personal friend Vernon Dahmer (Giancarlo Esposito). His boss (David Strathairn) notices that Black neighbors of Dahmer are unwilling to talk to white agents, but maybe they'll cooperate with Strider. The agent is given a special off-the-books assignment that requires some investigating, though he is mostly in the service of informant Gregory Scarpa (Mark Wahlberg), a New York mobster known for uncondoned methods of getting answers. For different reasons, neither Strider nor Scarpa is particularly welcome in Klan-infested 1960's Mississippi, though it's not like they're conducting the investigation to make friends.

Scarpa has certainly shown up to be one half of a pair of Buddy Cops. Everything from his hair to his sunglasses to his drinking and womanizing, indicates that he is the "wild" one of the team. And that's just his first impression. He's also got a mean mouth, a short fuse, and an itchy trigger finger. The man starts putting up a body count much earlier than Strider expected. He's not much more merciful in his interrogations, with the investigation rarely moving forward without information soaked in blood. Then again, at least he's getting the information, which Strider would never be able to get going by the book.

Strider and Scarpa settle into a rapport, though Scarpa is casually racist and says he doesn't care about the investigation outside of his specific assignment. Strider eventually learns to give verbal abuse as good as he gets. He even teaches Scarpa an epithet for white people that he doesn't already know. I found it hard to believe that Scarpa wasn't familiar with the term, or at least be able to easily guess its meaning from context. His ignorance in this scene is about as embarrassing for the movie as Dr. Don in "Green Book" being befuddled by fried chicken.

When it comes to the investigation, there's no learning from each other, Scarpa 100% brings Strider over to his side of using violence to get what he wants. And there is a lot of violence. Interrogation scenes see suspects begging Scarpa to kill them, but he won't end their suffering that easily. Granted, these men are always perpetrators of horrific violence themselves, which just means that all "action" sequences in this movie are a rough watch.

I get the point of making the violence in "By Any Means" so ugly, there are no winners in a hate-based war. I also get the point of making the character of Scarpa so unlikeable (provided it does the real-life Scarpa justice), sometimes assets to justice have to come from the dregs of society. But did this movie have to take so many cues from lighter Buddy Cop movies, as if it couldn't sell itself as something heavier? And did it have to whiff so badly on its few attempts at levity? The film takes itself both too seriously and not seriously enough, working occasionally, but not consistently. It never quite finds the means to elicit laughs "or" screams.

Grade: C

"By Any Means" is rated R for violence/bloody images and pervasive language. Its running time is 107 minutes.

'Spider-Man: Brand New Day, 'The Odyssey' Lead Weekend Box Office

LOS ANGELES (CNS) - The biggest blockbusters of the late summer continue to rule the box office, with "Spider-Man: Brand New Day" grossing $18 million this weekend in its sixth week in North American theaters, according to industry estimates released Sunday.

"The Odyssey" was second with $13 million Friday through Sunday in its eighth weekend in theaters, Rentrak reported.

"Spider-Man: Brand New Day" crossed the $2.4 billion mark in worldwide grosses and is now the third highest-grossing film of all time.

"The Odyssey" has grossed over $1.6 billion worldwide.

"Coyote vs. Acme" was third with $11.3 million in its second weekend.

Fourth place went to the crime drama "By Any Means," which opened with $7.4 million, followed by "Insidious: Out of the Further," which grossed $6.5 million in its third weekend.

A 20th anniversary re-release of Pixar's "Cars" claimed sixth place with $6.1 million.

Rounding out the top 10 releases were "Buddy" ($5.7 million), "PAW Patrol: The Dino Movie" ($3.3 million), "The End of Oak Street" ($2.9 million) and "The Dog Stars" ($2.7 million).

This weekend's overall three-day box office haul was estimated at $90.4 million. The year-to-date total is $7.357 billion -- up 20.4% from the figure at this time last year, according to Rentrak.

When Lunch Is the Main Event, Here's a 'Greek out' Take on Halibut and Halloumi Skewers

By MARIA KOUTSOGIANNIS
Voracious

The chapter on main dishes in my cookbook, "Greek Out," starts with an explanation of what "main dish" means to me.

Most people, understandably, immediately think of dinner. Because in many places that's the biggest meal of the day, and it's usually meat plus starch plus vegetable.

But the way I grew up thinking about meals, a main dish is more of a feeling than a set formula, and it's definitely not just about dinner. First of all, when I was growing up, the biggest meal of the day was usually lunch.

For this main dish, the idea is simple: Rub the halibut with sumac and cinnamon and a little drizzle of olive oil, grill until caramelized and charred, then hit it with some honey. Chewy, creamy, cheesy, sweet, salty — they're all in attendance in one fun handheld barbecue dish. Halloumi isn't as Greek as graviera as far as firm, salty cheeses go, but it holds its shape so nicely and goes toe to toe with the tender, juicy halibut.

Halibut and Halloumi Skewers with Dates and Figs

Serves 4 as a main or 10 as an appetizer

Ingredients

2 teaspoons grated lemon zest (from 1 to 2 lemons)
1 ½ teaspoons ground sumac
1 teaspoon garlic powder

1 teaspoon onion powder
1 teaspoon Diamond Crystal kosher salt
½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 pound skinless wild halibut, cut into 1-inch cubes
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
3 cups 1-inch chunks sourdough bread
10 fresh figs, halved
9 ounces halloumi, cut into 1-inch cubes
10 Medjool dates, pitted
Hot honey or regular honey, for serving Fresh mint leaves, for serving
Store-bought toum (garlic spread), for serving (optional)

Directions

Prep the halibut: If using wooden skewers, soak them in water for 20 minutes.

In a small bowl, stir together the lemon zest, sumac, garlic powder, onion powder, salt, pepper and cinnamon. Use paper towels to pat the halibut cubes dry, then transfer to a medium bowl. Sprinkle with the seasoning mixture and 1 tablespoon of the olive oil and gently toss to coat the fish.

Assemble the skewers: In a second medium bowl, combine the bread, figs and halloumi with the remaining 2 tablespoons olive oil and toss to coat.

Thread each skewer with a piece of bread, halloumi, halibut and fig, plus a date. Repeat until you've run out of ingredients and have made 10 skewers.

Grill: Heat the grill to medium heat — about 400 F or 200 C — and brush or spray with olive oil.

Add the skewers and grill until char marks form on the first side, 2 to 3 minutes. Flip and repeat on the remaining three sides, until the halibut is cooked through and flakes easily with a fork, 8 to 12 minutes total.

Serve: Transfer the skewers to a plate or platter, hit 'em with a drizzle of honey and lemon and a sprinkle of mint, then serve with toum, if desired.

Ratatouille

I had never eaten ratatouille before, let alone cooked it. But it has always captured my imagination. I have seen bits and pieces of the Pixar movie of the same name and have also seen this dish in other media as well. Why does a dish made up of seemingly normal vegetables have so much hype around it?

I have zucchini, onions, and tomatoes growing in my garden. And that got me to thinking about ratatouille again. So, I decided to see what it is all about and make it myself. Making up a new recipe as I went.

Oh boy, I'm sure glad I made this. Let's cut up some vegetables and make ratatouille!

Ingredients

- 1 large zucchini
- 1 eggplant
- 2 yellow onion
- 3 roma tomatoes
- 8 garlic cloves
- 3 tbsp olive oil
- 1 sprig or 1.5 tbsp dried rosemary

- Salt and pepper to taste
- 2 tbsp butter

To Make

Make caramelized onion for the base. To do so, cut 1 whole onion into very thin half-moons. In a medium skillet melt the butter on low heat. Add the onions and salt. Cook on low, stirring occasionally until onions are very soft and jammy. Usually, they take on a brownish hue. About an hour. While the onion is caramelizing, cut the zucchini, eggplant, 1 yellow onion, and roma tomatoes into ¼ inch slices. Salt lightly.

Preheat the oven to 300°. On a baking dish, place the caramelized onion on the bottom and spread evenly. Sprinkle about half the rosemary over the onions. Layer the zucchini, eggplant, onion, and tomato by alternating in a repeating pattern. You can layer them on their side or have them upright like in my photo. (I cut my slices in half to create half-moons to accommodate my shallow pan.) Fill the whole pan. Wedge the garlic cloves into the veggies. Sprinkle the remaining rosemary, salt and pepper to taste. Cover with parchment paper and bake for 3 hours. Pull out of the oven, let cool for 10 minutes and eat!

I served my ratatouille over white rice and garnished with fresh rosemary and garlic chives. EAT!

California Kills Bill Regulating Flock Cameras Even as Public Rage Grows

"It's a really disappointing outcome at a time when there is bipartisan concern about this mass surveillance tool."

- CATHERINE CRUMP, UC BERKELEY CENTER FOR LAW & TECHNOLOGY

BY KHARI JOHNSON, CalMatters

Amid a growing nationwide backlash against license-plate cameras, California this week, for the fifth year running, failed to enact regulations on the technology.

A bill in the Legislature would have strengthened privacy protections on how license plate data is collected and shared. It also would have guarded against misuse of automated license plate readers by law enforcement officers.

But after clearing the state senate the bill was stopped in the Assembly by majority leader Cecilia Aguiar-Curry on Monday, the final day the Legislature meets this year, before it could be introduced for a floor vote. It was one of a handful of bills that enjoyed strong support from lawmakers and looked poised to pass but died under mysterious circumstances.

All the bills California lawmakers have proposed since 2022 to reform or update regulations on license plate tracking by law enforcement agencies have failed to pass or become law. A similar bill passed last year but was vetoed by Gov. Gavin Newsom.

"It's a really disappointing outcome at a time when there is bipartisan concern about this mass surveillance

California lawmakers have tried and failed five times since 2022 to regulate technology that tracks license plates. Meanwhile, a national backlash against the tech has gained momentum. A protestor holds a sign while demonstrating on the corner of Broadway and 14th Street in Oakland on Aug. 20, 2026. Protesters gathered to call for a ban on automated license plate reader technology.

tool," UC Berkeley Center for Law & Technology codirector Catherine Crump told CalMatters. Crump testified in support of the bill in July.

Lawmakers pushing for more regulation of the readers point to police misuse of the data they collect, including illegally using it to help federal immigration enforcers and stalking people.

But law enforcement agencies say many of the proposed regulations would cripple a tool they say has helped solve a wide range of crimes.

"We were concerned that this bill was going to limit the utility of ALPR data to solve crimes, find missing persons, exonerate innocent individuals, and so the fact that it did not pass, we're glad for that," California State Sheriff's Association legislative director Cory Salzillo told CalMatters.

Mounting privacy concerns

Failure to pass the bill or even bring it up for a final vote comes at a time when opposition to license plate readers is growing in and beyond California. Police in Los Angeles and Redwood City and elected officials in California localities like El Cerrito and Campbell have ended contracts with the license plate reader company Flock Safety in recent weeks. Nationwide, more than 200 cities or law enforcement agencies ended license plate reader contracts in August, more than any other month since 2021, according to Secure Justice, a group led by Brian Hofer, a Bay Area privacy advocate who was held at gunpoint after a license plate reader incorrectly told sheriff's deputies he was driving a stolen car.

License plate readers use cameras and artificial intelligence to log the plate numbers of passing cars. The readers are joined into networks used by law enforcement and information from them can be shared locally or nationwide. The tech can locate criminal suspects or missing persons, but it's also been tied to police misconduct and immigration enforcement in violation of state law. More than 230 California police or sheriff's departments currently use license plate readers, according to bill author Senator Sabrina Cervantes, a Democrat from Riverside.

"It's unfortunate that Senate Bill 1013 did not get the chance to be voted on before the deadline passed, but I look forward to continuing to fight for the privacy rights of Californians next year," she wrote in a statement shared with CalMatters.

Cervantes argued in July that protections in the bill are necessary to prevent unlawful data sharing, because license plate readers routinely collect information about the movement of millions of law-abiding Californians, and to stop other forms of police misconduct. Lawmakers say license plate readers were unlawfully used by law enforcement officers to stalk or harass private citizens in Los Angeles, Marin, Orange, Riverside, Sacramento, San Diego, and Shasta counties.

Enforcement agencies outside of California have put the technology to even more controversial use. Oakland activist Crystal Zermeño, who attended a protest against the technology outside City Hall last month, said she's concerned about the tech being used to track women who get abortions or by federal authorities. After Cervantes' bill died, she asked, "How could we not as a state have the political will to do this in a moment when all of these [federal immigration enforcement] attacks are happening and we have limited defense?"

Cervantes' Senate Bill 1013 would have restricted state law enforcement agencies to using license plate data only for locating criminal suspects or missing people, would have made police take privacy and cybersecurity training, would have restricted sharing with national databases by default, and would have required the attorney general's office carry out random audits of license plate reader activity for misuse.

Had the bill come up for a vote, it still might have died, given support for the readers as tools of law and order. Nearly 40 law enforcement agencies and police unions opposed the bill.

Regulations in the measure had already been weakened, trading a requirement that police delete license plate data after 30 days for one that they "archive" it after 60 days, at which point they would need to obtain a warrant to search the data, unless it was connected to an active investigation or vehicle hunt. Police argued that old license plate data had helped solve cold cases and missing people investigations, and some, like the California State Sheriff's Association, opposed the bill even after it was watered down. Newsom vetoed last year's bill in part because it would have ordered police to delete license plate data after 60 days.

CalMatters reporting last year and this year found that local law enforcement agencies across Southern California repeatedly shared information with federal immigration agencies, a violation of a state law. A spections are not equivalent to traditional ones, which can take a week or more to document serious problems.

FDA officials have long made the case that inspections are only one tool to oversee safety.

“Inspections will never be the only way to ensure the safety of imported products given the massive volume coming into the country,” said Susan Mayne, FDA’s former food director who is now at Yale University. “That’s why FDA uses border inspections, importer inspections, sampling and other tools.”

But the outbreak in iceberg lettuce has also laid bare the potential downsides of those approaches.

In July, regulators were forced to retract a faulty test result that they claimed found cyclospora on a sample of Taylor Farms’ lettuce obtained at the border. Despite the error, FDA officials say they are confident the company’s farm is the source of the diarrhea-causing parasite. Mexican food authorities, however, say they have not found any positive samples or other red flags there.

A spokesperson for the Department of Health and Human Services, which oversees FDA, said the agency’s investigation is ongoing. Additionally, FDA officials are studying how many foreign inspections should be conducted annually “to ensure oversight comparable” to the U.S. food supply.

FDA inspectors took a month to arrive at Mexican farm

FDA inspectors arrived at the Taylor Farms site in Guanajuato, Mexico, in mid-August, about one month after the recall was announced July 17.

It was their first visit there since 2019. That year marked an all-time high for foreign food inspections before the FDA pulled most of its staff from the field during the pandemic.

Inspections for food — along with drugs, medical devices and other products — still haven’t recovered. And foreign food inspections actually fell further behind last year, down 17% to 1,140 in fiscal year 2025 from the prior year.

While inspectors were not among the 3,500 jobs targeted for termination by the Trump administration, the agency did eliminate more than half the staffers who handle travel bookings. That’s left inspectors to handle most of their own flights, lodging and other logistics.

Food experts say it shouldn’t have taken four weeks to get inspectors on-site in Mexico, considering the scale and number of people sickened.

“It took us too long to get boots on the ground,” said Frank Yiannas, the former top food safety official at FDA. “When these outbreaks happen in fresh produce, you have to respond quickly because these are very complex and changing ecosystems.”

The Taylor Farms recall involved thousands of packaged salad products combining iceberg lettuce with other vegetables. The products were shipped to major U.S. restaurant chains, including Yum Brands, which owns Taco Bell, Pizza Hut and KFC.

According to FDA figures, companies have announced more than 480 food recalls in the current fiscal year, already surpassing four out of the five previous years.

Food inspection targets have gone unmet for over a decade

Washington has tried before to overhaul the U.S. food safety system.

A string of deadly outbreaks involving spinach, cantaloupe and other produce led Congress to pass the Food Safety Modernization Act of 2011, which required additional testing, training and monitoring of hygiene conditions at farms. The legislation also set aggressive goals for FDA foreign inspections — targets the agency has never met.

Under the law, the FDA is supposed to inspect more than 19,000 international food sites annually. The agency hit an all-time high of 1,700 in 2019 — less than one-tenth of the target, according to the Government Accountability Office.

Former FDA regulators say the 19,000 target is unachievable and has never been properly funded by Congress — which has left FDA’s food budget essentially flat for years. Still, the FDA “has not identified an appropriate annual target,” GAO noted.

Perhaps the biggest challenge to boosting inspections is recruiting new inspectors, and retaining those FDA already has.

The FDA’s food inspection workforce includes more than 420 staffers, although 10% to 15% of its positions have been chronically unfilled, according to the GAO and former staffers.

Inspectors who work internationally can spend 50% or more of their working time traveling, a grueling schedule that has long caused turnover among FDA staff.

“Until you can better incentivize people to stay in those positions, I think the agency is going to continue to see high attrition, younger and less experienced investigators,” said Rogers. “That ultimately may impact FDA’s ability to enhance and increase inspections.”

Many experts say new approaches, including machine learning and remote monitoring of supplier practices, could help alleviate some of the need for inspections.

“We have to rethink how we oversee the safety of foreign producers,” Yiannas said. “We can’t use the same approaches and limited tools that we’ve used for the past 30 years.”

The 2011 food safety law called on manufacturers to place bar codes on each batch of produce, so that it can be quickly traced in the event of contamination. The rule was supposed to take effect in January, following years of discussions and revisions with produce companies. But the FDA again delayed its implementation after pushback from industry.

“There’s widespread acknowledgment that these are complex issues, but when you have 17 years to prepare for a final exam you should be able to pass it,” said Brian Ronholm, a former Department of Agriculture official who is now with Consumer Reports.

Flock

2020 state audit and investigation by Attorney General Rob Bonta found similar violations of state law that prohibits sharing license plate reader data with out-of-state or federal law enforcement agencies. Since June 2024 the California Attorney General’s Office has contacted 18 law enforcement agencies about possible or known violations of Senate Bill 34 and filed a lawsuit against the city of El Cajon near San Diego to stop the practice.

There are roughly 70 documented instances nationwide where police officers misused automated license plate readers to do things like track their wives, stalk former partners or pursue love interests, according to the Washington Post, including former Riverside County sheriff’s deputy Alexander

Vanny, who used Flock to stalk his former fiancée and was sentenced to six years in prison in February.

The technology can also inaccurately label some drivers as criminal suspects, leading to potentially violent confrontations. A Los Angeles Police Department audit released in July found that one out of three vehicles identified as stolen by Flock cameras were inaccurately identified.

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call 916-939-0772 for information regarding the trustee's sale or visit this internet website <http://www.qualityloan.com>, using the file number assigned to this foreclosure by the Trustee: CA-26-1052155-NJ. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. NOTICE TO TENANT: You may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call 866-645-7711, or visit this internet website <http://www.qualityloan.com>, using the file number assigned to this foreclosure by the Trustee: CA-26-1052155-NJ to find the date on which the trustee's sale was held, the amount of the last and highest bid, and the address of the trustee. Second, you must send a written notice of intent to place a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 15 days after the trustee's sale. Third, you must submit a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 45 days after the trustee's sale. If you think you may qualify as an "eligible tenant buyer" or "eligible bidder," you should consider contacting an attorney or appropriate real estate professional immediately for advice regarding this potential right to purchase. NOTICE TO PROSPECTIVE OWNER/OCCUPANT: Any prospective owner/occupant as defined in Section 2924m of the California Civil Code who is the last and highest bidder at the trustee's sale shall provide the required affidavit or declaration of eligibility to the auctioneer at the trustee's sale or shall have it delivered to QUALITY LOAN SERVICE CORPORATION by 5 p.m. on the next business day following the trustee's sale at the address set forth in the below signature block. Description of the Project: A General Plan Amendment (GPA-25-00002) to the Circulation Element and a Code Text Amendment (ZTA-25-00006) to Title 10 of the Perris Municipal Code to update the truck routes by removing three and adding one truck routes for compliance with AB 98. Specifically, the proposed update includes the following changes:

o Removal of San Jacinto Avenue between I-215 and Dunlap Drive.
The truck route along San Jacinto Avenue between I-215 and Dunlap Road is recommended to be removed due to its proximity to the residential community and Bob Long Park to the north.

o Removal of Ellis Avenue
from McPherson Road to Goetz Road.
The truck route along Ellis Avenue
between McPherson Road and Goetz Road is recommended for removal, as it is predominantly adjacent to residentially zoned properties and remains unimproved west of "A" Street.

o Removal of Ellis Avenue
between the Ellis realignment overpass
and Sherman Road.

The truck route along Ellis Avenue
between the Ellis Realignment Overpass and Sherman Road is recommended to be removed, as it does not meet the required freeway interchange spacing requirements and is located within a conservation area of the Western Riverside County Multiple Species Habitat Conservation Plan (MSHCP) and a Floodway, where development rights are restricted.

purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call (844) o Addition of Case Road from Bonnie Road to Watson Road.

A new truck route is recommended to be included along Case Road between Bonnie Drive and Watson Road, as a recently approved industrial project is located at the southwest corner of Watson Road and Case Road. Currently, trucks are not allowed to travel
southbound on Case Road to Ethanac Road or westbound on Watson Road to Murrieta Road, and this recommendation will not change this restriction.

Significant Effects Discussed in the Draft EIR: Based on the analysis in the Initial Study, the City concluded that the project could have significant impacts on the following environmental issues:
Transportation, Air Quality, Energy, Greenhouse Gas Emissions, and Noise. All other environmental issues were either determined to have no impact or to have an impact less than significant. The Draft EIR determined that the project would not create any unavoidable significant impacts with respect to transportation, air quality, energy, greenhouse gas emissions, or noise during the implementation of the proposed Project.

You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. IMPORTANT NOTICE: Starting March 1, 2026, Federal Law may prohibit ZBS Law from issuing a Trustee's Deed Upon Sale in connection with this trustee's sale until information about the winning bidder is reported to the U.S. Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network. See, 31 CFR § 1031.320 (https://www.ecfr.gov/current/title-31/subtitleB/chapterX/part-1031/subpartC/section-1031.320). If this trustee's sale qualifies as a "reportable transfer" under 31 CFR § 1031.320(b), and you, as buyer, qualify as a "transferee entity" under 31 CFR § 1031.320(e) (1) or "transferee trust" under 31 CFR § 1031.320(e)(2), you will be obligated to provide information about the Beneficial Owner(s) of the transferee to ZBS Law or ZBS Law's designated representative. If you qualify as an exempt entity or trust under 31 CFR § 1031.320(n)(10)-(11), you may be required to provide evidence of the exemption supported by a declaration under penalty of perjury. If the Trustee's Deed Upon Sale cannot be issued due to a qualified transferee's failure or inability to provide the necessary reporting information, the qualified transferee will be responsible for all fees and costs to reinitiate the trustee's sale. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (855) 976-3916 or visit this internet website www.auction.com, using the 26-78107. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale.NOTICE TO TENANT: You may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call (855) 976-3916, or visit this internet website tracker.auction.com/sb1079, using the 26-78107 to find the date on which the trustee's sale was held, the amount of the last and highest bid, and the address of the trustee. Second, you must send a written notice of intent to place a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 15 days after the trustee's sale. Third, you must submit a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 45 days after the trustee's sale. If you think you may qualify as an "eligible tenant buyer" or "eligible bidder," you should consider contacting an attorney or appropriate real estate professional immediately for advice regarding this potential right to purchase.
